A guesthouse at Belle Mont Farm, a luxurious resort designed by architect Bill Bensley, which opened on the West Indian island of St. Kitts last month. The 91-villa hotel is part of Kittitian Hill, a sustainable community with 400 acres of organic farmland. Bensley conceived the villas to recall the architecture of the traditional chattel houses that populate the island.

In addition to seven three- and four-bedroom farmhouses, the 84 guesthouses have private pools and verandas.

A guesthouse at the resort, which features farm-to-table dining and a golf course. The spa will open later this year, but in-room treatments are available until then.

Perched on a hill, the property affords expansive views of the Caribbean Sea below.

An outdoor bath at one of the guesthouses.

Guests are encouraged to explore the farm, where a wide range of crops are grown, including passion fruit, pineapples, bananas, and mangoes, as well as vegetables, coffee, and cacao. From $2,250/night; bellemontfarm.com
